ShaleComm Announces Two Conferences in Denver and Pittsburgh

ShaleComm East and ShaleComm West will cover challenges spanning the entire United States

Rockville, MD – November 26, 2013 – The producers of the ShaleComm Conference, previously held in San Antonio, TX in 2013 and Pittsburgh, PA in 2012, and the OilComm Conference and Exposition, held in Houston, TX, announce the expansion of ShaleComm 2014 to ShaleComm West, to be held April 22 – 23 in Denver, CO and ShaleComm East, to be held June 24 – 25 in Pittsburgh, PA.

“We heard from our audience that they wanted the ShaleComm Conference to come to their side of the country and cover the challenges they are facing in their shale plays,” said Lindsey Fuller, Show Director of the ShaleComm Conferences. “We’re excited to launch ShaleComm West in Denver and ShaleComm East in Pittsburgh to provide a more accessible venue for communications professionals to connect, discuss common issues and share lessons-learned with each other.”

ShaleComm East and ShaleComm West will both feature a two day conference and an Exposition that will be open the first day of the conference. The programs for the ShaleComm Conferences are designed with the assistance of the ShaleComm Advisory Board to cover communications problems that arise from terrain challenges, maturity of the drill site, local infrastructure, security, and more. Exhibiting companies will showcase their products, services and technology available for oil and gas companies operating in each region.

Each conference will also feature networking events throughout the program and a networking reception the first night for attendees, speakers and exhibitors to collaborate and continue the conversations started during the day.
